"It is amazing what you can accomplish if you do not care who gets the credit."

Harry S. Truman

Just like in other companies, the Corona pandemic has created a new challenging situation for us at A+ Science. But challenges are not always negative, you can also see them as opportunities for improvement, which is the approach and mindset we have chosen at A+ Science.

Most of us have been working remotely from our homes for the last couple of months. In this new situation the importance of teamwork becomes obvious and we have all become fully aware of how much we value the daily contacts and interactions with our colleagues.

There is much to be learned from this transition, from traditional office work to remote work where we can no longer just look to the left and tap the person sitting next to us on the shoulder to ask a question. We see it is an opportunity to evaluate and improve our company's ability to support employees during a time of physical distancing and isolation.

That's why we have transformed our daily schedules to make room for more frequent and quick communication, often with the use of video conference and team chats.

This way we are continuously updated on each other's activities and about our company operations. Individual team members are able to share their concerns about their workflow and how they emotionally respond to the situation thus enabling others to offer support.

In a global crisis like this we feel blessed to be a small company where it is easier to keep in touch with colleagues on daily basis. By showing appreciation and making sure that we let everyone know that we are there for each other, we at A+ Science strengthen the team affinity. This improves collaboration and reinforces the mutual trust which is necessary to successfully develop the team and roll out new ways of working.

When lifting this way of teamwork to the bigger picture and view it from an external perspective you will realize that this reflects the approach that we at A+ Science apply while building relations with our partners and customers.

Top-quality customer delivery is always our top priority. We are developing new strategies which include the identification of areas where we can improve and fine-tune the quality of our work. We are also recruiting new staff, skills and competencies to the already strong A+ Science team. Lots of positive things are happening in our company despite the tough COVID-19 situation.
